or Fajelu (Tucker & Bryan 1956:107), but according to my informant, the Pöjulu know their own language as kútúk nà pɔ̀ɟúlù .

A short vocabulary was published in Czekanowski 1924 which I shall refer to occasionally. All other data are my own. My informant was Mr. Alesio W a n i, then 24 years old; he was born and grew up in Berika. Mr. Wani speaks Pö, English, (Juba) Arabic, Lingala, and a little Swahili; he works as a senior community development officer for the Ministry of Co-operatives and Rural Development in Juba.

7.1.8. Karimojong (Km)

Of all languages compared, Km is an exception in so far as I was not in a position to carry out my own field work in Uganda due to the political circumstances prevalent at that time. Moreover, apart from few grammatical notes in Tucker & Bryan 1966 and a short vocabulary in Johnston 1904, no reliable sources for this language were available to me. I am therefore indebted to Professor O. Köhler for giving me access to an unpublished 200-item word-list he had collected in 1970. The Karimojong number about 56,000 people; they call their own language a-karimoɟoŋ , or a-karamoɟoŋ (Tucker & Bryan 1956:110).

7.1.9. Teso (Te)

The Teso people whose language name is á-tésò , number about 465,000 speakers in Uganda and approximately 45,000 (c. 86,000 according to Heine 1980:57) in Kenya, i.e., altogether more than half a million (cf. Tucker & Bryan 1956:111).

My own data collected in September 1977 only represent Te as spoken in Kenya. Information on 'Uganda Te' is taken from Hilders & Lawrance 1956 and 1958. Otherwise no other sources are used in this study.

My chief informants were the Rev. Festo Barasa O k o n y e n e, then c. 50 years old, and his wife Susa, and Mr. Maurice E t t y a n g a, then 32 years old. Rev. Okonyene was born and grew up in Myanga, Busia District, Kenya. Mr. Ettyanga who is a prima-
